HEADQUARTERS
150TH BOMBARDMENT GROUP (H), JAF
APO 520 US AFPM

20 March 1945

On 15 March 1945, our group was on a mission to bomb the marshalling yards at Wiener-Neustadt, Austria. I was flying as tail turret gunner in ship number 506 in the number five (5) position of the first (1st) box in the second (2d) attack unit. Lieutenant Harris was pilot of a B-24D type aircraft, serial number 42-64448, nicknamed "Bottoms Up", flying in the number ten (10) position of the same box. Enroute to the target, just before the rendezvous point, the formation was approaching a dense cloud. I was standing by the left waist window waiting for the formation to go into the cloud so that I could watch the other aircraft in the formation to be certain that they did not get too close to my ship while flying through this cloud. At this point, I could see Lieutenant Harris's aircraft in the formation. As the formation went through the cloud, I continued to watch and each time there was a break in the cloud I would observe what the other aircraft were doing. About the second (2d) or third (3d) break in the cloud, I saw Lieutenant Harris's aircraft banked to the left on an approximate ninety degree (90°) bank and was in a climb of approximately thirty degrees (30°) and then the cloud covered my view of this aircraft. This is the last time, I saw Lieutenant Harris's aircraft. The ship was under control and nothing was visibly wrong with the ship. The altitude was approximately eight thousand feet (8,000'). The time was 1100. The coordinates were 46°00'N-17°00'E. When the ship I was flying in broke away from the formation. When we came out of the cloud, the formation was reformed but Lieutenant Harris's aircraft was not in sight. I did not see any parachutes leave the ship.

HEADQUARTERS
150TH BOMBARDMENT GROUP (H), AAE
APO 520 US ARMY

20 March 1945

On 16 March 1945, our group was on a mission to bomb the marshalling yards at Wiener-Neustadt, Austria. I was flying as waist gunner (right) in ship number 600 in the number nine (9) position of the first (1st) box in the second (2d) attack unit. Lieutenant Harris was pilot of a B-24E type aircraft, serial number 42-64448, nicknamed "Bottoms Up", flying in the number ten (10) position of the same element. Enroute to the target, just before the rendezvous point, the formation went through a dense cloud. As the formation began to fly through this cloud, I could see Lieutenant Harris's aircraft in the right lane flying slightly lower than it would normally be. As the cloud got heavier, the ship went out of sight. This is the last time I saw Lieutenant Harris's aircraft. The ship was under control and nothing was visibly wrong with the ship. The ship I was flying in continued through the cloud for approximately ten (10) minutes and when we came out, the formation was reformed. But Lieutenant Harris's aircraft was not in sight. I did not see any parachutes leave the ship.
